Excluding the first two months of the season, the closest the Halos came to reaching first place of the AL West was third, 7 1/2 games out with a record of 36-35 on June 19th... Of course, all the attention on the diamond went to unanimous AL MVP Shohei Ohtani who finished third in the majors with 46 home runs. That's not all: He tied two others in the big leagues for the most triples (8); was fourth in slugging percentage (.592); fifth in total bases (318); and fifth in OPS (.965). He received the nod as the starting pitcher of the All Star Game and while on the mound, he led the Angels pitching staff in wins (9) and strikeouts (156). Shohei also drove home 100 runs from the batter's box. He's a great ticket-seller, too, by putting lots of fannies in the seats. Superstar Mike Trout got off to another MVP-type start but suffered a torn calf muscle, May 8th, and would never return to the lineup. Anthony Rendon missed a lot of time on the I. L. as well. He played in 58 games and contributed 6 HR and 34 RBI.
